LIVELY IMAGINATIONS TELL WHY IVY DOES NOT GROW ON COLUMN

Why is it that the ivy does not grow on one Column? This has been the question in the mind and on the tongue of every visitor and new student at the University for years. Rumor has it that there always has been one Column bare while the other five have been covered with the vines.

'Tis said that underneath each Column there has lurked a well-known professor in the University, each so attached to the campus and the school that he could not leave it even in death. Under five of the Columns lie God-fearing Christian professors who never swore at their students, never gave F's and often gave holidays. Above them the ivy grows in profusion. But under the sixth is the grave of an atheist, a ferocious professor who gave fiendish examinations, made his students work on holidays, assigned them lessons to do on vacation days and otherwise broke all laws of right living and Christian spirit. Above him the ivy refuses to grow, although covered by all the vines known to landscape gardeners.

In the old days, another version declares, when students gambled, swore and drank, two students made a wager as to whether one Column lacked ivy or not. The bet was to be settled the next morning, so in the dead of night the wiser student gathered together his gang and they slipped up to the Columns, evading the watchful engineers, and cut all the ivy from one. The next morning one Column was indeed bare of ivy and in punishment, perhaps, for the deed, ivy has never grown upon it since.

Tradition says, too, that when the army was stationed here at the time of the Civil War one of the soldiers used to secretly meet his sweetheart by one of the Columns of what was then Academic Hall. When the troops returned the lover was not with them and every evening the broken-hearted girl used to go out and weep for hours beside this Column when she had so often met her lover. Sadness, therefore, may be the cause of the absence of ivy from one of the Columns.

These are some of the traditions handed down as to the cause of the ivy not growing on the one Column. If none of these suit your fancy, why not imagine one for yourself?

FEW WANT VICTORY MEDALS Columbia Veterans Not Sending in Applications.

Only a low per cent of former soldiers have applied for their Victory Medals, according to J. A. Douglas, commander of the local post of the American Legion. Several applications for the medals were made while the United States Recruiting Station was maintained in Columbia, but since the discontinuance of the station few applications have been made.

GETS STATISTICS ON BEES E. A. Logan Will Compile Information on Bees.

All bee culture inquiries for the state of Missouri were recently handed over to E. A. Logan, agricultural statistician, in accordance with the policy announced at Washington last July of turning over to state agricultural statisticians all farm statistics for their respective states. Mr. Logan is now collecting statistics on bee culture in Missouri. The first report will be ready May 1.

Ten years ago Missouri was third in stands of bees in the United States with California first and Ohio second but during the last decade the number has declined considerably, along with the number of apple trees, so that Missouri may lose that position when the census figures are completed. The following questions will be asked: Number of colonies compared to last year and to the usual year; condition of honey plants with mention of the main producers; the normal health and strength this season; number of colonies lost this past winter and cause.

It was estimated in 1919 that Missouri had 178,000 stands of bees and keepers reported a 7 per cent loss the following winter. Missouri's bees produced 60 pounds of honey per stand in 1920 but the preceding four year average was only 27 pounds. The average for the United States was fifty-two and forty pounds for the same periods. Boone county in 1919 had 1,727 stands of bees. The intention is to develop figures upon honey production by counties and assist the local producer to market his product in the surrounding territory.

BUYS PAPERS TO HELP POOR Russian Baron in Constantinople Asks for Work.

From the New Near East
Cris Mills, Near East Relief worker in Constantinople, buys many newspapers in the course of a day. She has not time to read them all, but she cannot resist the pathetic appeal of the refined-looking men and women who stand hopelessly on the street corners of Constantinople with the papers offered merely for sale.

Why are they there, the refined-looking men and women? They are there because there is no place else in the world for them to go. They have no money. Sometimes, if luck is with them and enough Crisis Millses pass their corner in the course of the day and a bed; usually they are grateful if there is enough for either the food or the bed; but often than not there is not enough for either. The relief workers come to know often of these really destitute cases and are able to help many of them, though ingenuity and resources are often taxed to the utmost.

Miss Mills was stopped one day on the street by a Russian baron. He was in full uniform of the Russian Royal Brigade, minus his sword, which he had sold to buy his dinner the previous night. He asked for work, but what could a Russian baron do, who knew nothing but how to fight and command a regiment?

The orphanages are full; work is found, if possible, for boys of any size at all. There are orphan boys who are "batmen" for British officers and there are diminutive messenger boys. One little fellow was set up by the relief workers as a bootblack and all the workers are having as many "shines" a week as their pocketbooks will allow.
